Alan Brubaker, the County Engineer, and Steve Jewell, project manager from DLZ addressed Committee. Steve Jewell gave a powerpoint presentation to give more information about the manual. Jerry Feeman asked where the $82,000 comes from, to which Alan Brubaker replied that it comes from the gas tax. Jerry Feeman then asked why a company from Lansing Michigan was chosen to do the work instead of a local company? It was explained that DLZ and Lansing work very well together as a team and were rated as a team. The Lansing company also has a lot of expertise. John Schmidt inquired as to the scope of responsibility as far as unincorporated areas and townships. Alan Brubaker stated that those entities would be able to adopt the County Manual. Bath already has a Traffic Access Management Manual . Paula Prentice asked if other counties have this or would Summit be on the "cutting edge" if this was implemented. Alan Brubaker said that Allen County, Montgomery County, Franklin County and perhaps more already have this. It is also important for urban counties because the state programs are geared towards rural and do not support urban and economic development to the degree that we see in Summit County. The county would benefit from implementing their own manual. Ilene Shapiro stated that she wants the Planning Commission to be involved.
